Basal-gap intercept measurements quantify the size and amount of large gaps between plant bases, which can be used to track susceptibility to runoff and water erosion. Data for each parameter were first averaged over the three transects to derive a plot estimate. Plot estimates at all treatment and control plots were then averaged together to derive values for the entire monitoring unit. Line-Point Intercept At every meter along each 50-m transect, a pin was lowered to the ground at a 90 angle to the transect line. Each plant and type of soil surface that intercepted the pin was recorded at each point. Plants intercepted at each point were categorized as top canopy, lower canopy, or basal cover. The soil surface was recorded as litter, bare soil, rock, moss, or the base of plant (Herrick and others, 2005a). Several types of cover data were derived using the line-point intercept procedure and are presented in this report. Vegetation-foliar cover is the proportion of the soil surface covered by a vertical projection of a plant canopy (Herrick and others, 2005b) regardless of plant species or functional group. It is derived by counting only top canopy data from the line-point intercept technique. For example, if total foliar cover of perennial grasses was 20 , this would mean that 20 of the ground surface of an area had perennial grasses as the uppermost vegetation layer. Basal cover is the proportion of the soil surface...
