Excerpt from Speech of Hon.: Columbus Delano, of Ohio, on the Political Condition of the States Lately in Rebellion; Delivered in the House of Representatives, February 10, 1866 The House having under consideration the Presidents message, as in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union Mr. Delano said: Mr. Speaker: I propose to examine the following question: what is the political condition of the States lately in rebellion? Four years and more of war has produced great changes in the social condition of the insurrectionary States, and has materially affected the political relations heretofore existing between them and other States of the Union. These mighty changes cast upon us the momentous question which I propose to consider. The importance of this question has never been equaled by any subject presented to an American Congress since the formation of our Government. In my opinion, upon its proper solution depends not only the peace and prosperity, but the existence of our country. Differences of opinion in regard to the condition of these States and as to...
