Assessing Estuaries - Lafferty birds increases with wetland size but that estuaries that have few fish species for their size do not have few bird species for their size, suggesting that these two biota respond independently to environmental factors. I have also found it useful to separately measure the flooded, unvegetated area of the marsh (the sum of pans, channels, and mudflats) because fishes and birds seem to respond more to flooded area than wetland size per se. Vegetated marsh and flooded habitats can be mapped from aerial photographs. Sampling the Biota An enjoyable way to understand an estuarine community is to put on waders, grab sampling gear, and count the plants and animals that live there. Plants, invertebrates, fishes, and birds all require different sampling methods. The biggest challenge when sampling wetlands is to obtain data that are comparable over time or across estuaries. This means that substantial thought must be given to standardized timing, habitat, methods, and efforts. An excellent primer on sampling estuaries is from the Pacific Estuarine Research Laboratory (PERL 1990), and interested readers should consult this reference. Sampling strategies will vary according to the types of questions being asked. Here I briefly describe the basic rationale behind the most common types of sampling in wetlands. Central to sampling design is the selection of sampling sites. It is useful to avoid the temptation of simply sampling adjacent to access points. In most cases, it will be necessary to stratify sampling by habitat type (for example, vegetated...
