Excerpt: . of helping men but by bearing what they bear. No man will lighten a sorrow of which he has not himself felt the pressure. The saviors of society have still to be crucified. Jesus Christ would never have been the Lamb of God that bore the sins of the world, unless he himself had taken our infirmities and borne our sickness. No work of healing will be done except by those whose hearts have bled with the feeling of the miseries which they have set themselves to cure. You must take blind beggars by the hand if you are going to make them see; and you must not be afraid to lay your white clean fingers upon the feculent masses of corruption in the leper's glistening whiteness, if you are going to make him whole. Go down in order to lift, and remember that without sympathy there is no sufficient help, and without communion with Christ there is no sympathy. Conviction Elsewhere is drawn a distinction between conviction and some other things improperly called by this name. So far as his social duty is concerned the Sunday-school teacher must have a twofold kind of conviction: In the first place, on the one hand, he must be convinced as to what is for his pupils highest good. To amuse people, to feed them, to give them what they consider good pupil times may be antagonistic to that for which the Sunday...
