A pyramid owes its great firmness to the breadth of its base and the low position of the centre of gravity. Walls are often strengthened with small expenditure of material by building offsets or by battering the side toward which the forces tending to overturn them are directed. A high carriage is upset much more readily than a low one, because the centre of gravity is higher, so that a smaller horizontal force overcomes its dynamical stability, and also if the road is sloping a less inclination is required to throw the line of direction outside of the base. For this reason wagons intended for carrying heavy loads are generally made so as to have the greater part of the load lower than the axles of the wheels. Quadrupeds have a much greater stability than man, because of the broader base...
