This development is related in part to the general progress of educational method and in part to the modern rise of social science; it is partially due to the insistent demands made by the laboring classes in recent years for social readjustment. Modern educational method including in its sphere the churches, has effected the present great interest and activity in religious education. Social science has attempted to infuse into the teaching of the Sunday school some of the results of modern sociological investigation. Changed industrial conditions have made it necessary in many cases for the churches to readjust their methods and programs in an attempt to bring guidance, peace and religious healing to a new society. These three movements, more or less unconsciously combining, have resulted in many of the church denominations in the introduction of social study courses dealing with problems of civics, industry and sociology. The following analysis deals with one phase of the social study movement: its treatment in these courses of the problem of capital and labor. This single aspect has been chosen in order to make the task as definite as possible. It is believed, however, that the principles underlying the detailed subject are applicable, in many cases, to the whole problem of sociological study...
