SOCIAL RULES OF FACEBOOK

Createspace, United States, 2013. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 229 x 152 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Since graduating high school in 2004, I have seen many changes in the world. No changes have occurred more rapidly than those in the area of technology. When I walked across the stage to receive my diploma, Facebook did not exist. It was only a few years earlier when the use of cell phones became widespread. In 2004, text messaging wasn't very popular. When I think of how much technology has changed the lives of people all around the world in the past ten years I think about how it's also changed the lives of people with autism and other disabilities. This technology boom has been a positive thing for the autism community by creating more platforms and avenues to improve communications for people who struggle with this issue. Being able to text message someone instead of picking up a phone, dialing their number, and actually talking to them on the phone is a lot easier. It's a lot less stressful than a phone conversation. Texting is an easier form of communication for me. When you are talking to someone in person the response needed to keep the communication and conversation flowing is an immediate one. In texting, I can take a moment to think through what I want to say. The same can be said for Facebook and email. It's a form of communication that can be beneficial for people with autism. However, I don't want to be a person with autism who hides behind this form of communication. Along with the many pros there are to the online form of communication and texting there are also many cons and sometimes the...
